My Dear Friends:

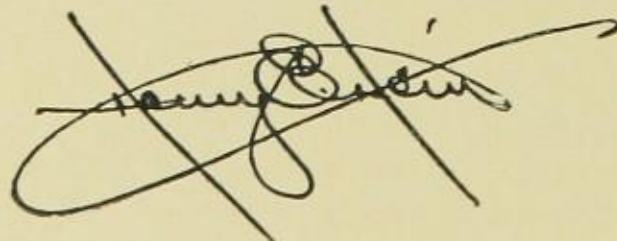

Play fair and hit the line hard, sums up a recent president's appeal to the youth of America. In these last words of mine to you, I want to impress the idea behind that stirring message indelibly upon your minds.

Play fair! A concise way of saying what all the wise men of the past have told us. From Confucius to the Prophets, from Marcus Aurelius to the Christ, there has come, ripened through the ages, the fruit of experience--Happiness is yours as you promote it in your neighbor. Yes, my boys and girls, Play Fair and it will be fair with you.

Hit the line hard! Give of your best to the last ounce of your strength. Do not spare yourself. What seek you--Wealth? How easily it is lost. Ease? What assurance have you of its permanence? Honors? They are much more easily stripped from you than won. One thing only do I know that is worth having and which, gained, cannot be taken from you. And that is the contentment that is ours when we do each task that it is your BEST. You must heed that inner voice whose softest whisper cannot be shouted down, that is our truest judge. Contentment, of the kind I mean,--it is the only happiness that cannot cloy. It is the goal that the finger of the ages points out to us in the scroll of life.

My dear boys and girls overflowing with the glorious enthusiasm of youth on the threshold of great things--with real love for you, with wistful admiration for you, I exhort you to Play fair and hit the line hard.

A handwritten signature in dark ink, appearing to read "James C. Butler", with a large, sweeping flourish extending from the end of the signature.

Alma Mater

Beyond the city's noise and clamor,
Serene beneath the heaven's gold,
Clear in the radiant morning sunlight,
Our Alma Mater we behold.
To us its loyal sons and daughters,
A glorious task it now shall be,
To write in blazing crimson letters
Monroe's fair history.

And on the altars of devotion,
We vow to glorify its name,
To make its story one bright legend,
Of love and service, faith and fame.
In paths of learning this our motto,
"To seek the truth we'll ever dare"
On field of sport, Monroe will win, for
We'll battle brave and fair!

That when with age its name is honored
And ivy twines about its walls,
Faint echoes of the past shall hallow
Its dear and ever sacred halls.
And we who love our Alma Mater
Shall see its glories still unfold,
With loyal pride and true devotion for
The Crimson and the Gold.

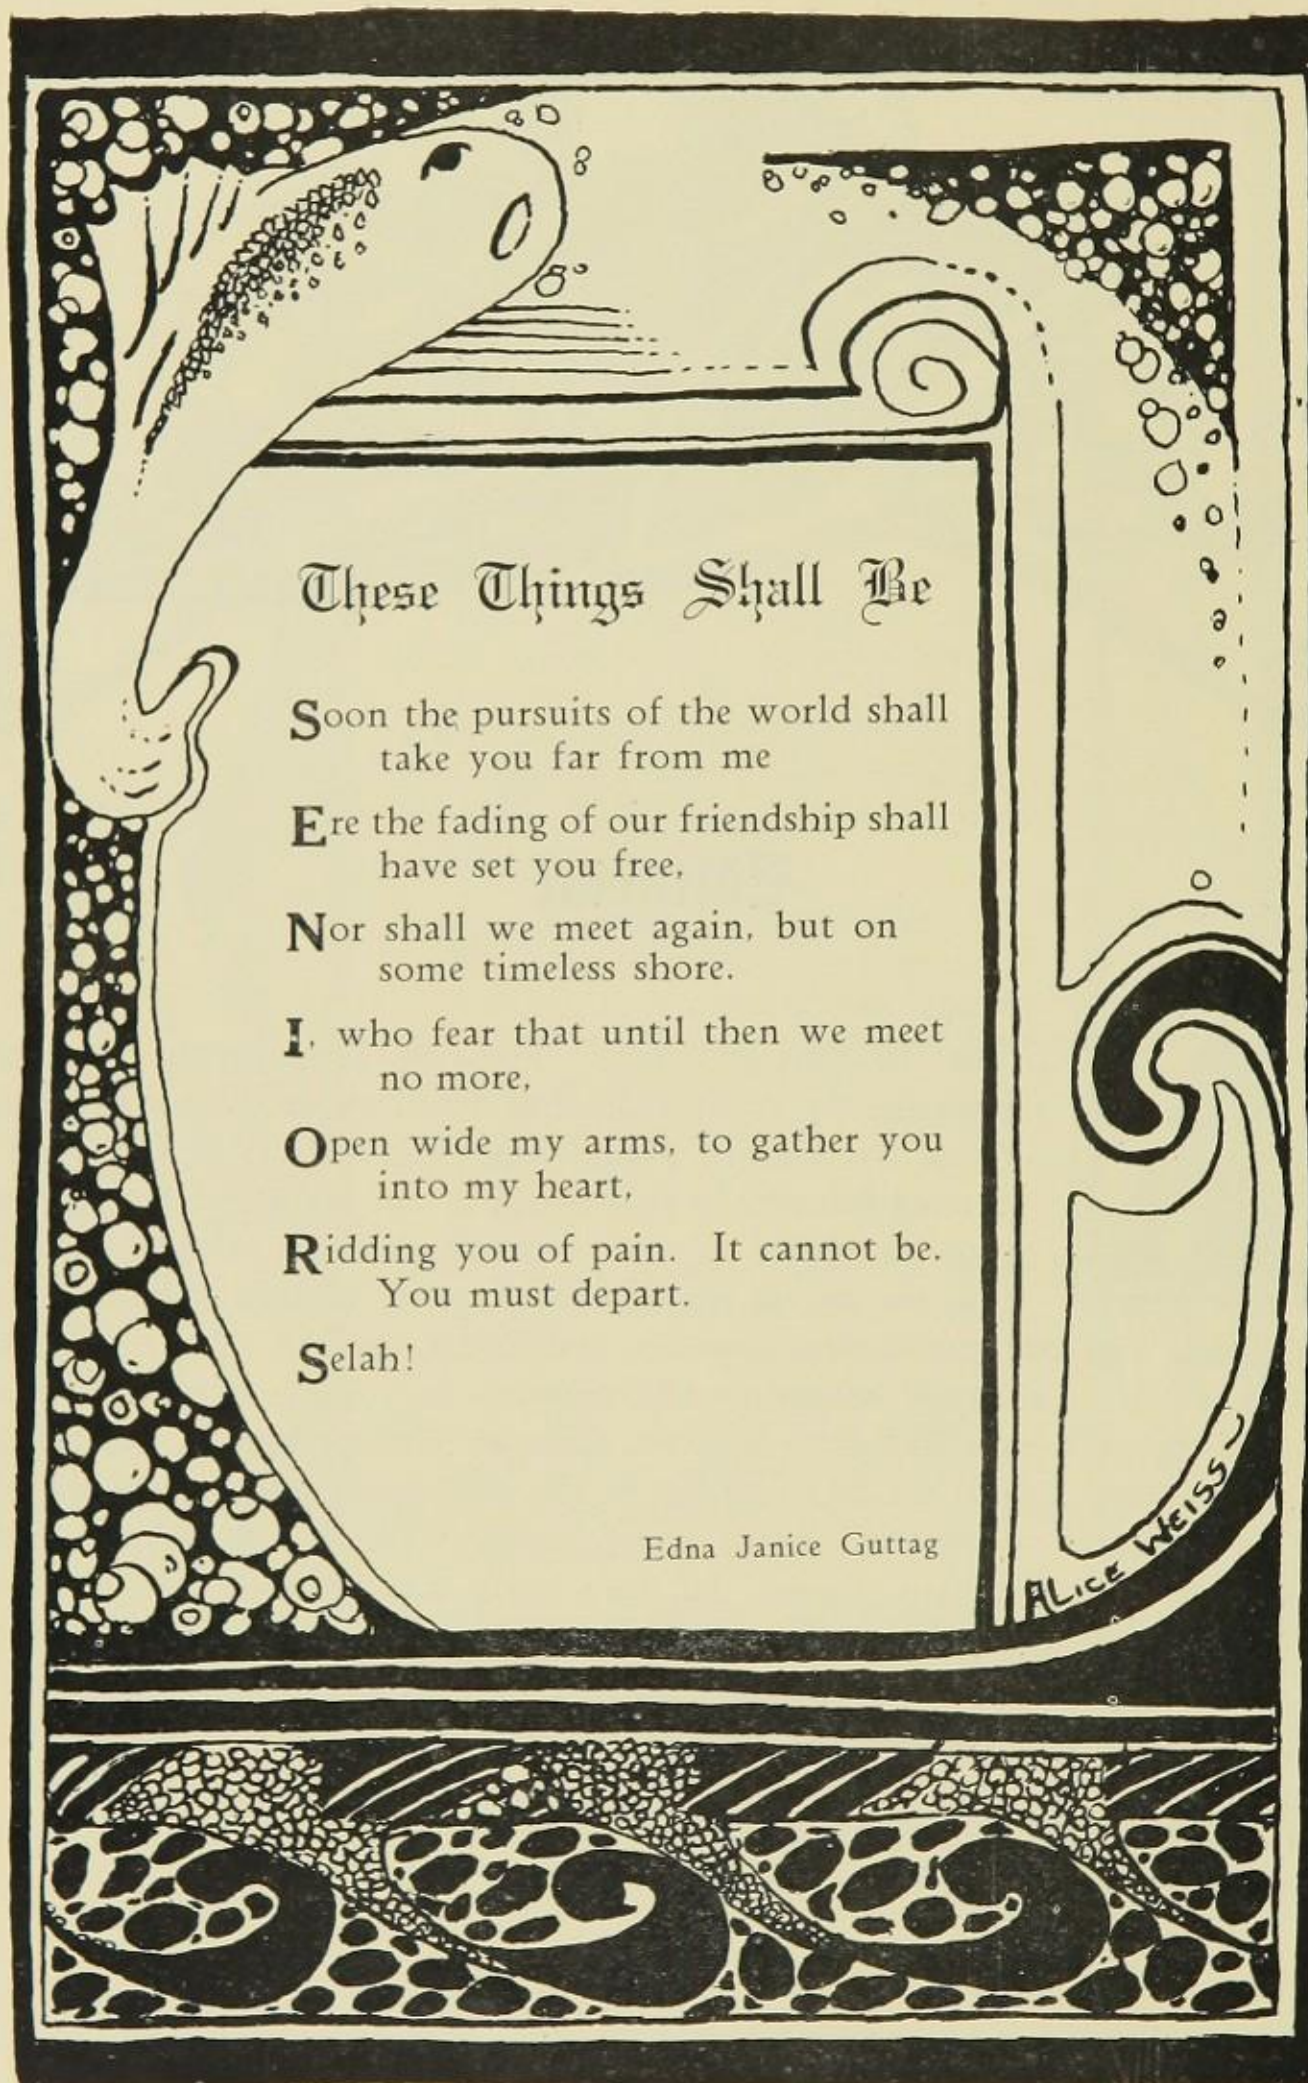

Editorial

T last the time has come. For four long joyous years we have eagerly awaited the time when we should have handed to us our ribbon bound diplomas, and with Dr. Hein's parting handshake still warm in our memories be sent out into the world to receive our share of its gifts. But now that we are on the threshold, ready to take our leave, we look back and our graduation assumes a different aspect. We no longer look upon it as a happy adventure; an emotion very akin to sorrow takes hold of us. We have had some difficult times at Monroe but on the whole we were happy. Will we be so happy in the new fields that we are setting out to conquer? Will there be so many people willing and eager to give us a boost over the hard places? In life's hard race, however, we have an advantage over the other fellow. We have the priceless heritage that is the gift of James Monroe to every graduate. We of Monroe have been taught by the fine example set by our faculty, the right way to treat our fellow man, to be square, fine and never to cause anyone unnecessary sorrow. It is these things that set us apart from others, that mark us as Monroe Graduates. We are proud.

These Things Shall Be

Soon the pursuits of the world shall take you far from me

Ere the fading of our friendship shall have set you free,

Nor shall we meet again, but on some timeless shore.

I, who fear that until then we meet
no more,

Open wide my arms, to gather you
into my heart,

Ridding you of pain. It cannot be.
You must depart.

Selah!

ALICE WEISS

The President Speaks

NOT many days remain until we shall make the final rounds of the building, bidding goodbye to old familiar places and faces.

At this time, it is customary to recall sentimentally the laughter and tears of the last four years and give voice to heartfelt regret at parting with the people and the things we have learned to love and value. In the tradition of departing sons and daughters, we should step through the door with a sigh and a bowed head.

Let's not.

It is silly to think that when we go, we shall leave behind all we have learned to cherish. On the contrary, everything of value to us, everything we have taken to ourselves as being worth while, will endure and prosper with the passage of time.

True friendship cannot wane merely because paths are no longer parallel.

Knowledge does not fall into decay.

Happiness becomes nothing less because it has been lived through.

These things we shall take away with us and carry through life with us "for richer or poorer, in sickness and in health."

Then, all precedents to the contrary notwithstanding, let us graduate not with hymns of sad farewell but rather songs of happy thanksgiving. When the doors close behind the class of February '29 for the last time, let us go forth with light hearts and laughing lips because we have faith that whatever Monroe has given to us, will survive the great trial of all Man's works the acid test of Time.

Purgatory

I tried to perch
On a mountain crest
And look off into endless space.
But I found that all that I could see
Was the echo of a pretty face
That follows me throughout all times,
That prods me while in bed I lie
And pains me till I yearn to die; to die.
Oh God, there is no pain so great
As that which comes to a man in love
Who will not bow to fate; to fate.

The Senior Promenade

THE Prom had been our star for months. We could hardly believe that January Fourth had come! It was only our fear of being too early for a dramatic entrance, that kept us from hurrying down-town the day before.

As we drew up to the Hotel Pennsylvania, we saw other couples that we knew, ascending the steps to the lobby. In the confusion of removing our wraps, and powdering our noses, we noticed little else, until we reached the grand ballroom. Woman-like, we delighted in seeing the beautiful splashes of color the girls made against the black and white tuxedos of their escorts. The green palms helped to give an impression of people in a well-known world. The splendid playing of the band, the dancers on the floor, and those talking in the fringes of the ballroom were facets in one great diamond of gayety. Crowds drifted in and out during the evening. Everyone seemed to know everyone else, and was glad of the fact.

At one o'clock the Senior Class President led the Senior Promenade. Our throat felt as though we could never keep our sadness down. Our eyes were very shining and proud. We felt as though we were ages older; as though we had undergone all the experiences known to man.

And then the Prom was over. Groups separated as they left the hotel, and went the way of every crowd: to dine, and to dance again. We waited awhile, and saw some leave. Then we too departed. Another page had turned in the history of our class.

In A Fawn

You are a fawn,
I am the gresward.
When you frolic
Your sharp hoofs
Penetrate my thick skin.
But I could not live
Were you not here
To crop the thistles
From my rough coat.

Wild Witch Revelry

The storm blows bolder, bolder, bolder.
The raging storm blows bolder, bolder.

Windy witches whirl beneath the cold night sky
(Ring, ring, ye black crow, sing,
Perch on your cold ice bough.)
They twirl their skirts—by and by
(With a clang, clang, hammer bang)
I wish that I knew how
They'll mount on high
(With a rang a tang a rang)
And fly up to the moon
(Croon, croon—ye last, lone, loon
One last, long, wild, forsaken tune.)

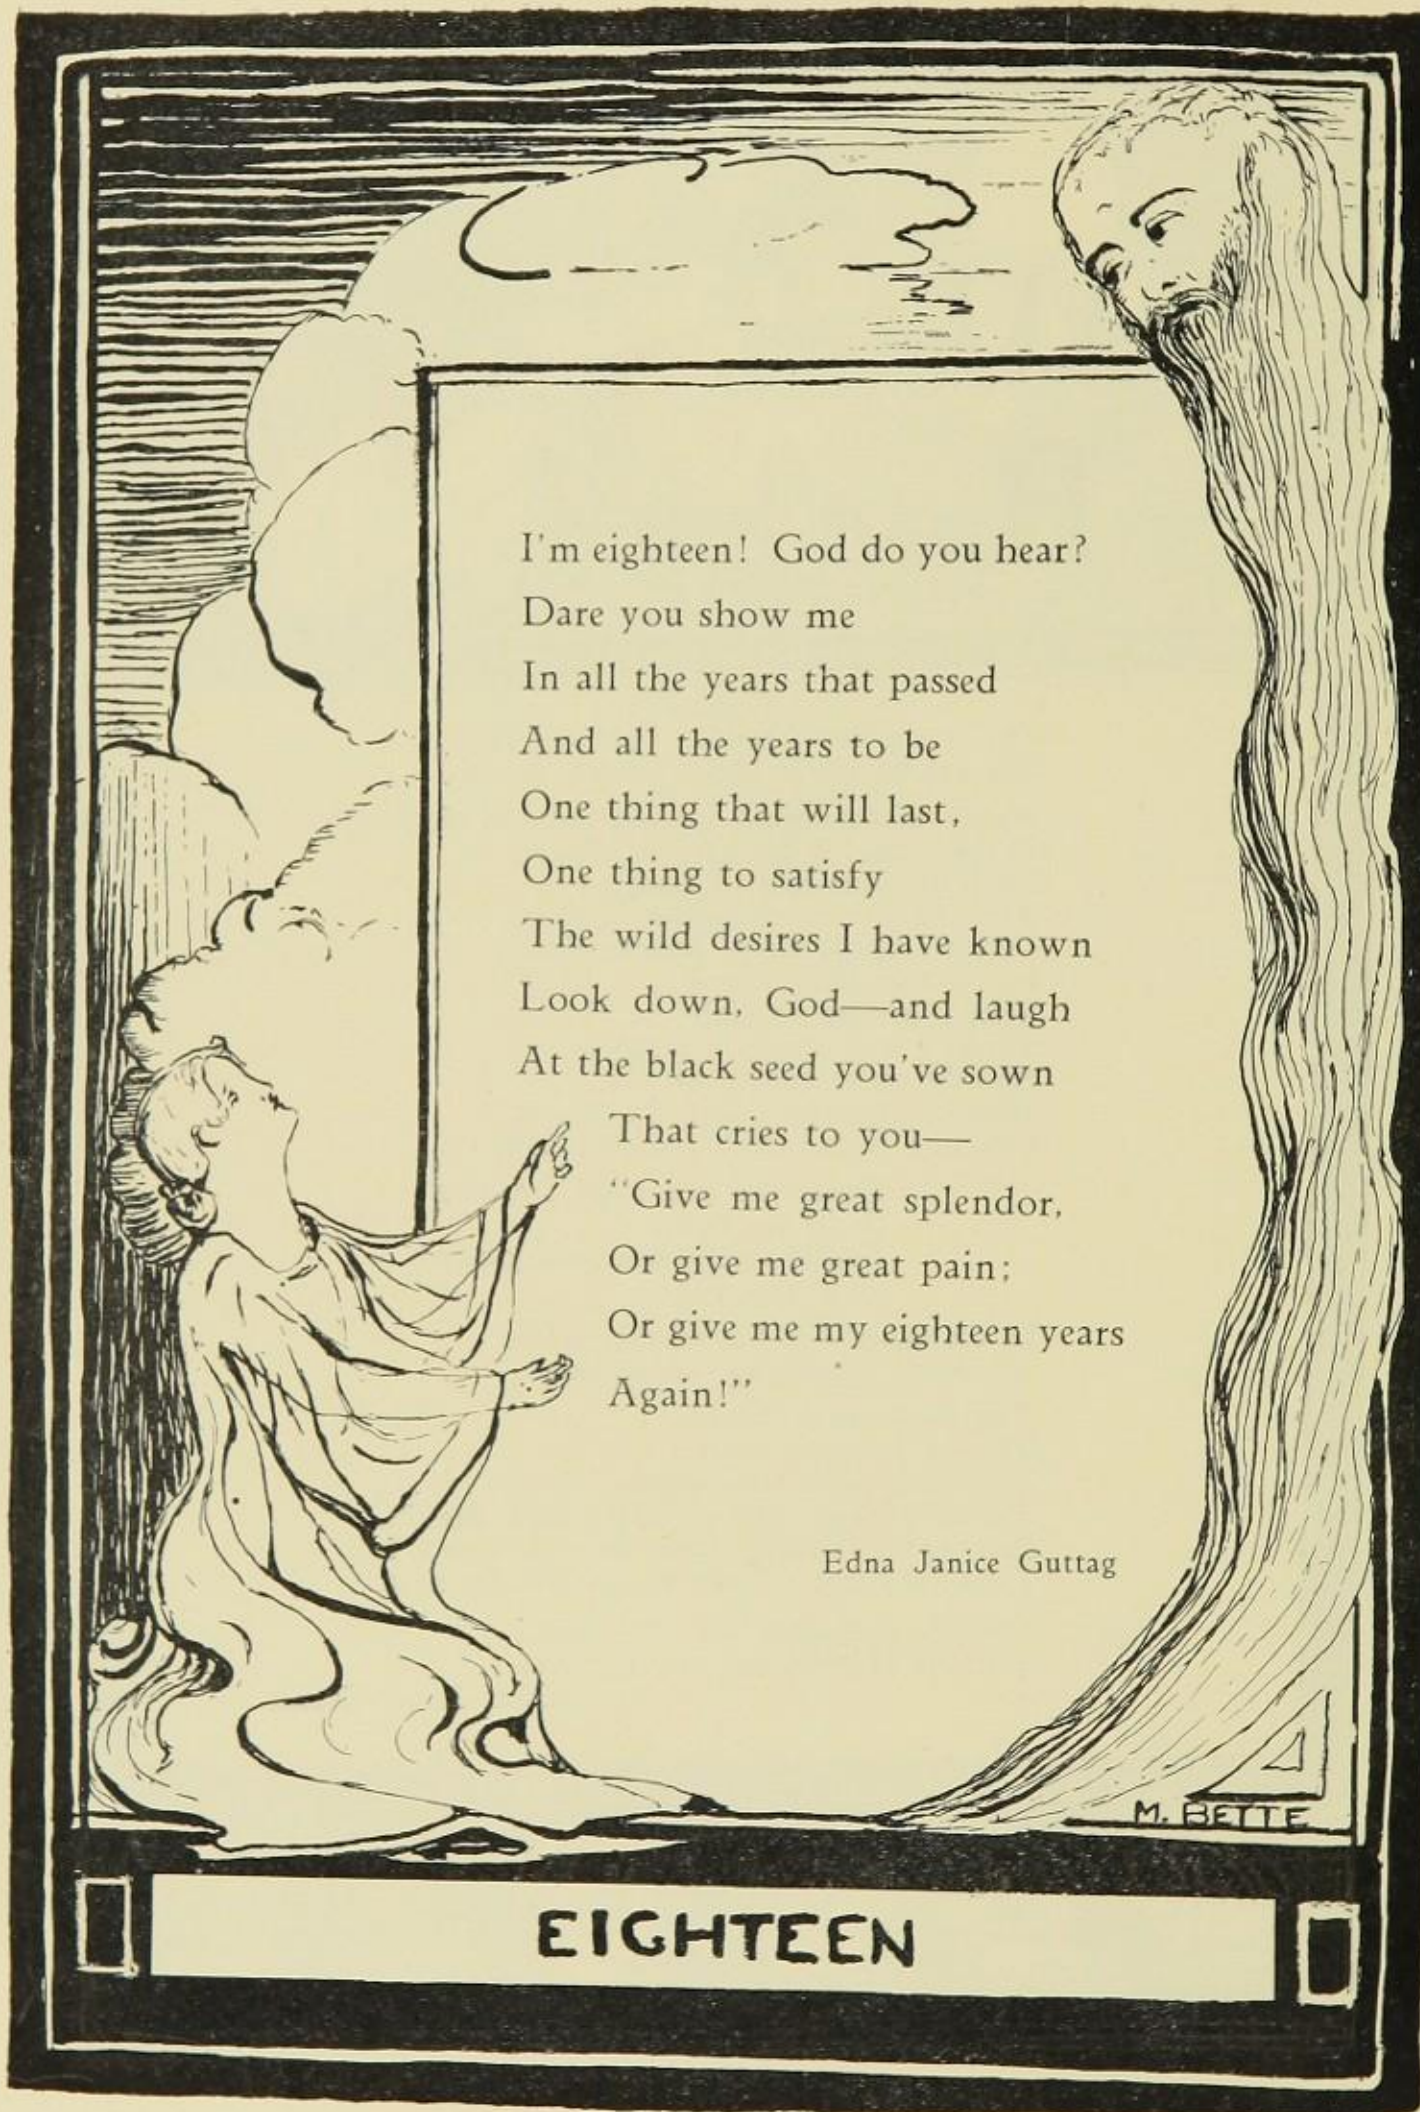

Down the tree, away and free
Swirl the leaves
Scatter round, warm the ground
Cold tree grieves.

In the silver disc the witches crowd
Whistling, screaming, crying loud.

The bleak earth shivers;
The ice-dammed rivers
Tink-tink with life-freezing clinks
The cold water from the black bank shrinks.
Pale moon trembles from the (witches') feet.
They are gone! Flown down with the sleet.

The disc is fading into the black;
Hear the frosted trees as they crack.

Edna Janice Gutttag

I'm eighteen! God do you hear?
Dare you show me
In all the years that passed
And all the years to be
One thing that will last,
One thing to satisfy
The wild desires I have known
Look down, God—and laugh
At the black seed you've sown
That cries to you—
"Give me great splendor,
Or give me great pain;
Or give me my eighteen years
Again!"

Class History

HIS graduation is the last one of the old guard. We leave behind all of our little world that we have known for the last four years. We have given something to our school that we did not find, tradition. The incoming classes have our work as a background. It may not be as splendid as we wish, but it is the best we have been able to do.

We set a pace that did not slacken with the passing of time. The very first issues of the Mirror and the Doctrine went to press with the work of Leonard Dal Negro, Mac B. Perlman and Edna Janice Gutttag. The first operetta produced, Pinafore, saw Frank K. Bulter in his first role, that of Captain Corcoran. A successful start that was to be only one step in the career of Leonard Dal Negro, was the basis for his future work in the political life of the G. O.

The following year saw Maurice B. Bloom in the position of Student Business Manager for all the school publications; a position that he was to control excellently for the six terms he served. Leonard Dal Negro accepted the President's chair in the Law Society, the Monroe Naturalists, and the Botany Club. Edna Janice Gutttag was an outstanding member of the Poetry Club and besides being Vice-President of the Senior Scribes, contributed to the Doctrine, the Mirror, the Poetry Annual, and the Latin Paper. Mac B. Perlman and Rosalie Steiman entered the field of G. O. activities, and as all those who tread this path, worked through most of their high school life with the General Organization.

The next period of our existence was marked by a new regime in the publication of the Mirror. Frank K. Butler (where have we heard that name before?) became Editor-in-chief of the paper, having William Degenhart as Managing Editor. William O'Keefe and Mac B. Perlman worked for the success of this student publication. The Doctrine found new recruits in Kate Resniknoff, Karen Peterson and Dora Zucker.

SEPTEMBER 1928!—"I? Oh, I'm a SENIOR!" Frank Kelly Butler by a sweeping vote became the president of the Senior Class. Rosalie Steinman, our Vice-President, Louis Gonzales, our Secretary and Dora Zucker could be seen anxiously conferring with Mr. Graham at all times of the day.

In the G. O. elections, Hilda Jacobs completed a victorious campaign for President of the G. O. Joseph Greenberg took the Vice-Presidency and Ruth Forstat was made Rep-at-Large.

Our Athletes burst into full glory in their final games. The Soccer Team, the Track Team, the Football Team, the Basketball Team, and the Tennis Team found excellent material in the ranks of the Seniors.

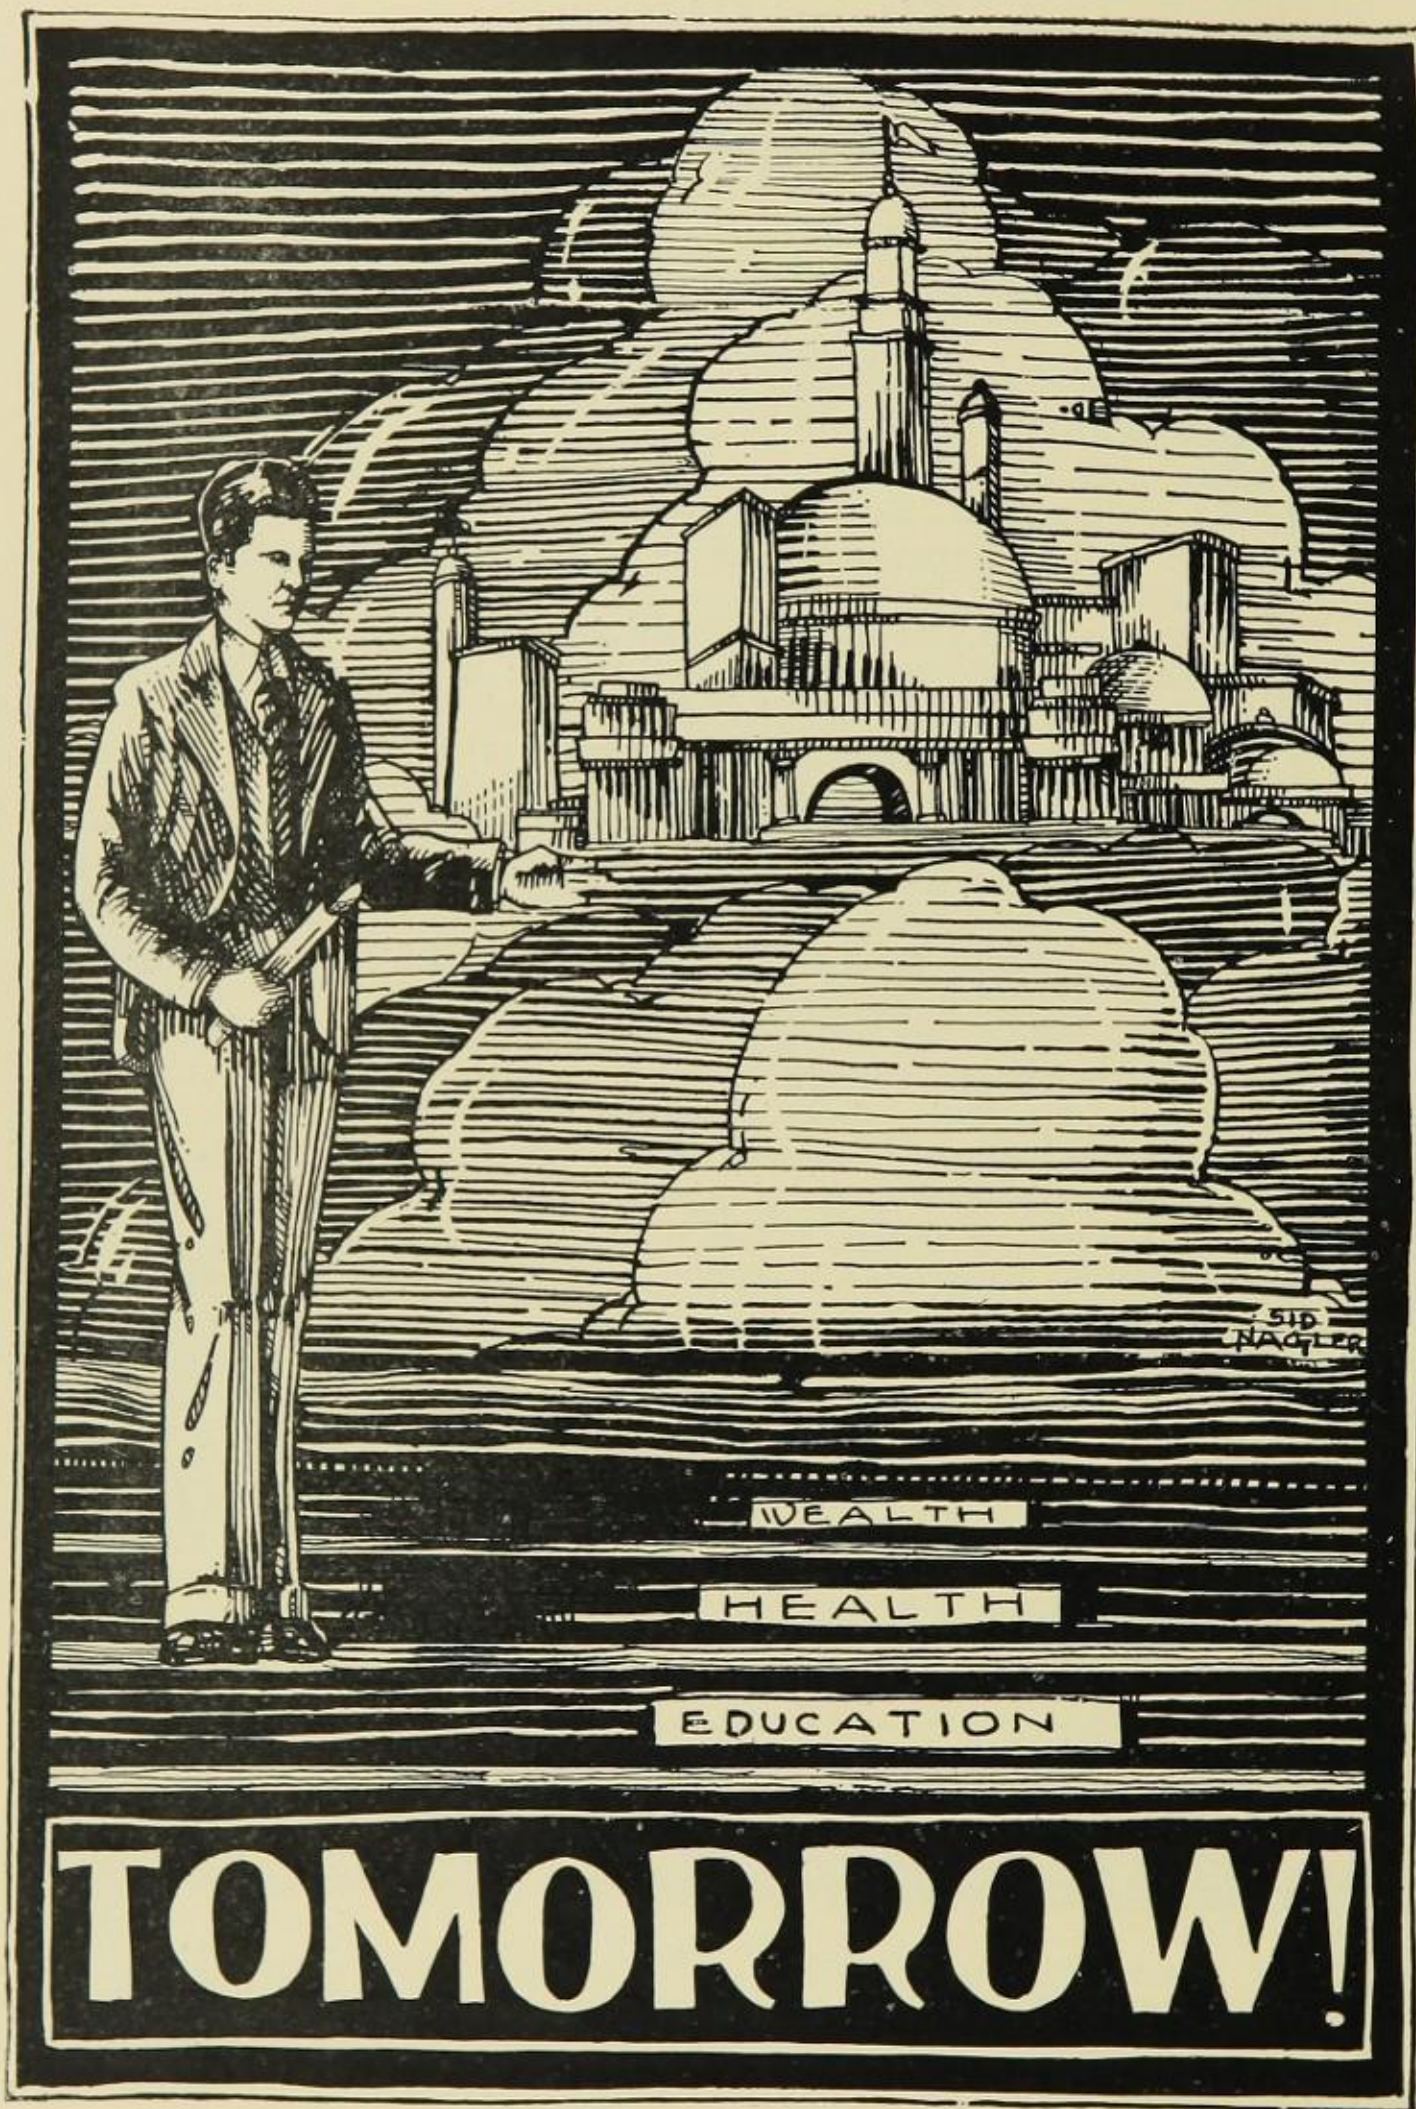

The last Operetta to be seen by the class of '29, the Pirates of Penzance, was marked by the part of the Major-General, played by Frank Butler. Bernice Kupler portrayed the role of Mabel, Bill Tieger that of Samuel, and Ruth Meyer that of Ruth. Karen Peterson became Editor-in-chief of the Doctrine, and Edna Janice Gutttag completed seven terms work on the magazine.

Our Senior activities passed in colorful array: Red Letter Day, the Prom, Senior Class Night, and as a final consummation—Commencement.

These are no more. We can have these things only in our thoughts. But while they lasted, who were as glad as we?

Class Prophecy

THE boat from Europe was coming out of quarantine. The passenger list gave evidence that I was on board: a very gratifying list, with the Edna Janice Guttag all curlicued and bedizened, or whatever is done to a name. After the publication of my first book of poetry, "Facies in Nocte," the world wasn't quite big enough to hold me. Incidentally, the victorious Olympians of '44 were also passengers: Lou Ruttner, Harold Wolkind, Nathan Sassman, Beatrice Croft, Al Faigelman, Dorothy Richman, Dave Sanders, Mitchell Rosenbaum, William Youdelman and Dave Lazarus. They were a rollicking crowd, and took up most of the deck.

When we docked, I was startled to see the Great Triumvirate, Frank Kelly Butler, Bill Degenhard, and Bill O'Keefe appearing to be very busy doing nothing.

"Never mind, Edna," Frank called. "We didn't come to see you!" (Frank is that way, you know) "Bill is writing the headlines of this for the Times." Then I first noticed the autocratic pencil perched on Bill Deg's ear.

I don't know how it came about, but we all piled in one car, and I heard my old address given to the driver.

"But I don't live there any more," I objected.

"A location like that, with a conveniently situated depository, can't afford to go to waste," Frank sagely remarked.

As we drew up to the old familiar diggings, I noticed a green and gold sign on the door, "Ye Ould Sod."

"This is a rather neat night club, if I do have to say it myself," Frank cried. "As caterer to St. Peter all the way up, or down, according to your viewpoint, she brings in a tidy sum."

"And I'll have you know she carried the best 'Alabam' I can get." (This from Bill O'Keefe.)

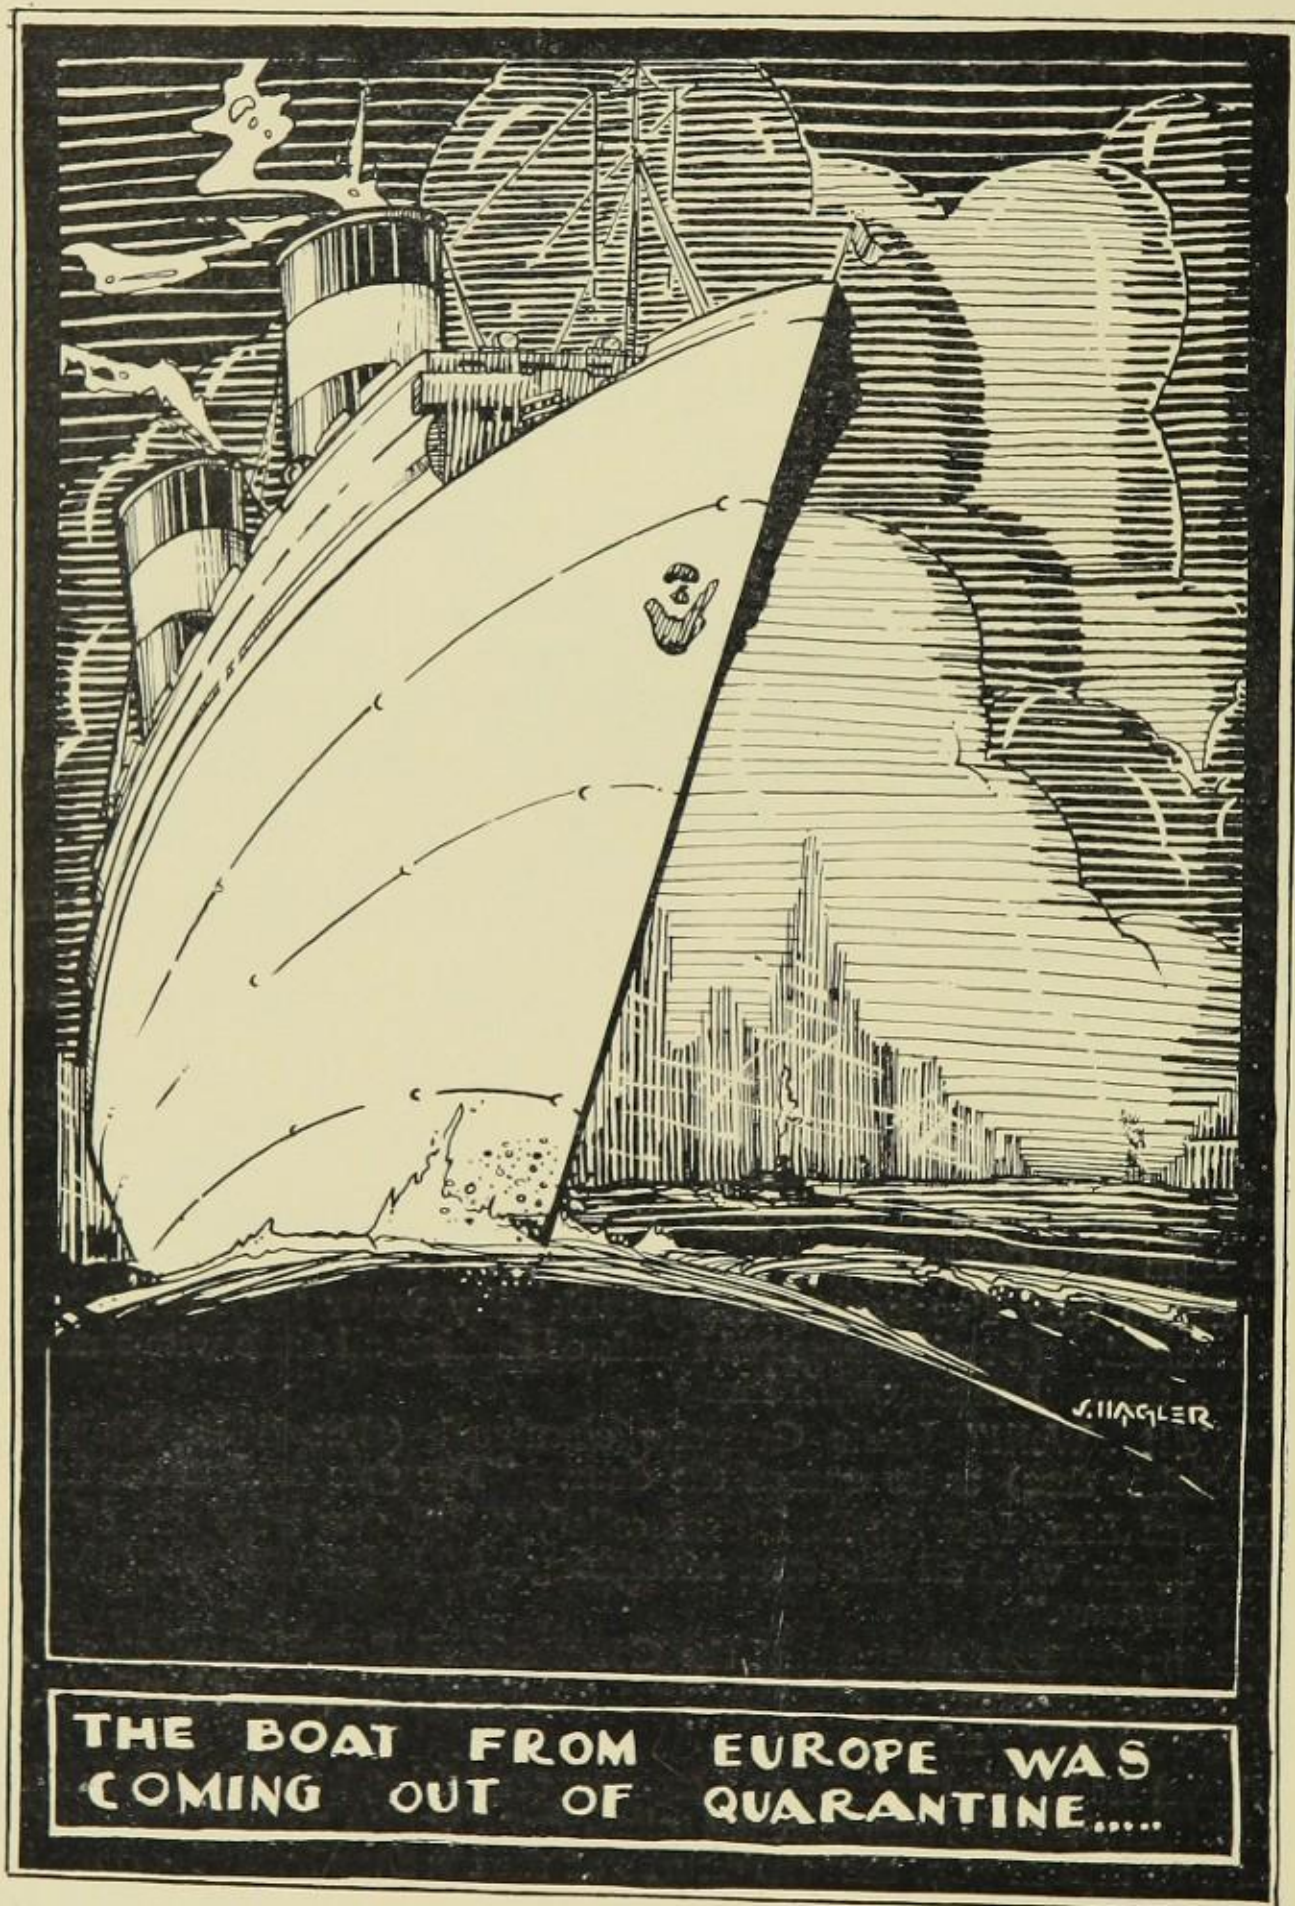

"That's why I've been drinking rank gilly water for three years," Frank retorted. (I really suspected Frank of looking all these wise remarks up before time. I must watch him.)

"Well! Well!" Louis Gonzales ejaculated (though he wouldn't have called it that) as he opened the door. "The gate receipts are fine."

Behind him, Maurice B. Bloom called, "Will you have one of our souvenir books, with all the latest advertising—Oh! It's only you. Well, come in anyway."

"Being business manager of the Congressional Record is what makes him like that," Reuben Klate informed me, as he gave me the glad hand. "I'm the host, so I don't mind anybody."

Aaron Lewittes, Barrister at Large, or something horribly intellectual like that, announced from a small platform, "Ladies and Gentlemen: I beg leave to inform you, that the returns of the elections have just come in. We have with us to-night, the President of the United States, Hilda Jacobs; the Vice-President, Rosalie Steinman; the Secretary of State, Dora Zucker; and the Secretary of the Interior, Ruth Forstat."

"What a windfall," was all I had breath left to say.

"A rather expected occurrence," someone murmured in my ear. "Oh" I said shamefacedly, and turned away, but seeing that it was Richard Kinney I turned back immediately to inquire as to his occupation. "I'm merely the principal of James Monroe High School." I hurried away, completely downcast. I couldn't say anything funny about that.

I happened to glance at the walls. They were the same rich green and gold as the sign, but they were designed with exquisite technique and finesse (or rather that was what I was told later). Anyway, the entire room appeared interestingly executed. I chanced to glance at the corner of one of the panels, and I saw, "Hilda Krause & Ann Simmons, Interior Decorators."

There was a call for silence and seats. I looked up, and noticed Chester Swanson asking everyone to, "sit down, please, and keep quiet," so that we could give the little girls and boys a nice big hand, and he could get back to his radio announcing.

Things now are pretty hazy, but I can remember it was an excellent entertainment. Allen Charousuchin, and Jeene Brookner did a neat dance. Billy Tieger, and Leonard Dal Negro were a humorous pair, who, as they confided to the audience, were Undertaking Men. They'd undertake anything. Bernice Kupler and Ruth Meyers sang a duet. Lillian Fox did a specialty number, though I couldn't see where the adjective fitted, unless they meant specialty putrid, or words to that effect. Rose Cohen danced as delightfully as she did formerly. She told me later she adored acting in the Grand Street Follies. The orchestra was composed of Bill Kuhbach, at the piano, assisted by Phil Abramson, George Tudor playing the sax, Murray Dzitser the trumpet, Milt Forstat playing cello, and Leon Liner conducting. However, I still maintain that Mac B. Pearlman, and Mac H. Perlman, who served the liquid refreshments, helped to make the evening a success.

I saw Beatrice Krevans and Kate Resnikoff very busy with pencils and wads of paper. I suppose they were spoiling someone's reputation. They are star reporters on the Herald-Tribune.

Hippocrates Apostle, I was informed, counted the empty bottles daily, to find out the percentage or other of something to do with the weather, or the price of wheat, or whatever it was.

The entire Journalism Class was interviewing the entire Public Speaking Class and between the questions of, "What breakfast food do you prefer?" and "To what do you attribute your success?" could be heard, ". . . To the wife and children." and "Unaccustomed as I am to Pub . . ."

The Glee Club insisted upon bursting into snatches of song, which were quickly squelched by the policemen guests, the former Patrol Squad, who had laid aside their duties for the evening, but who had forgotten that they were off patrol.

Hy Greenberg carried a standard, "Vote for Lincoln for President and Abolish Slavery."

Sam Stessin, the Publicity Manager was giving himself a great big hand.

Bill's stuff couldn't have been so weak because things became fainter and fainter till I found myself under the table and I slept.

Tragedy of a Plate of Ice Cream

I and Mil looked rather dejected. And the reason—they had no one to take to the prom—nor had they been asked. It wasn't fair for some girls to have so many boy friends, and others not to have any at all. They reasoned this way, and reasoned that way, but could not understand why the gods had passed them. In vain did they rack their brains for answers. The more they thought of it, the worse they felt. And—the prom was only two weeks ahead! Not to go to the prom? Why—why, the idea was preposterous! Wasn't there someone whom they could take? Dick? Dick was too short. Hal? Hal was too fat. Johnny—Johnny wouldn't do. There was Ted, but he was only one—and Ti and Mil couldn't be separated. How they cursed the day they were born, born to misery like this. They sat and sat—and sat and sat (as if that could help). Suddenly Ti jumped up!

"If we can't find the boys we want—we'll make them," she cried. The expression on Mil's face was a mixture of sadness, joy, sorrow, and fear. Could it be that help was coming at last? Somehow Fate had taken pity on these forsaken females and had managed to place an idea in Ti's head at the right time. And, this was Ti's plan. In school she was continually being praised for her athletic appearance. Well, here was the time to make use of that characteristic. She'd masquerade as a boy. Mil, the fair one would be the girl. The girls became very busy and secretive the following week much to the annoyance of their special schoolmates.

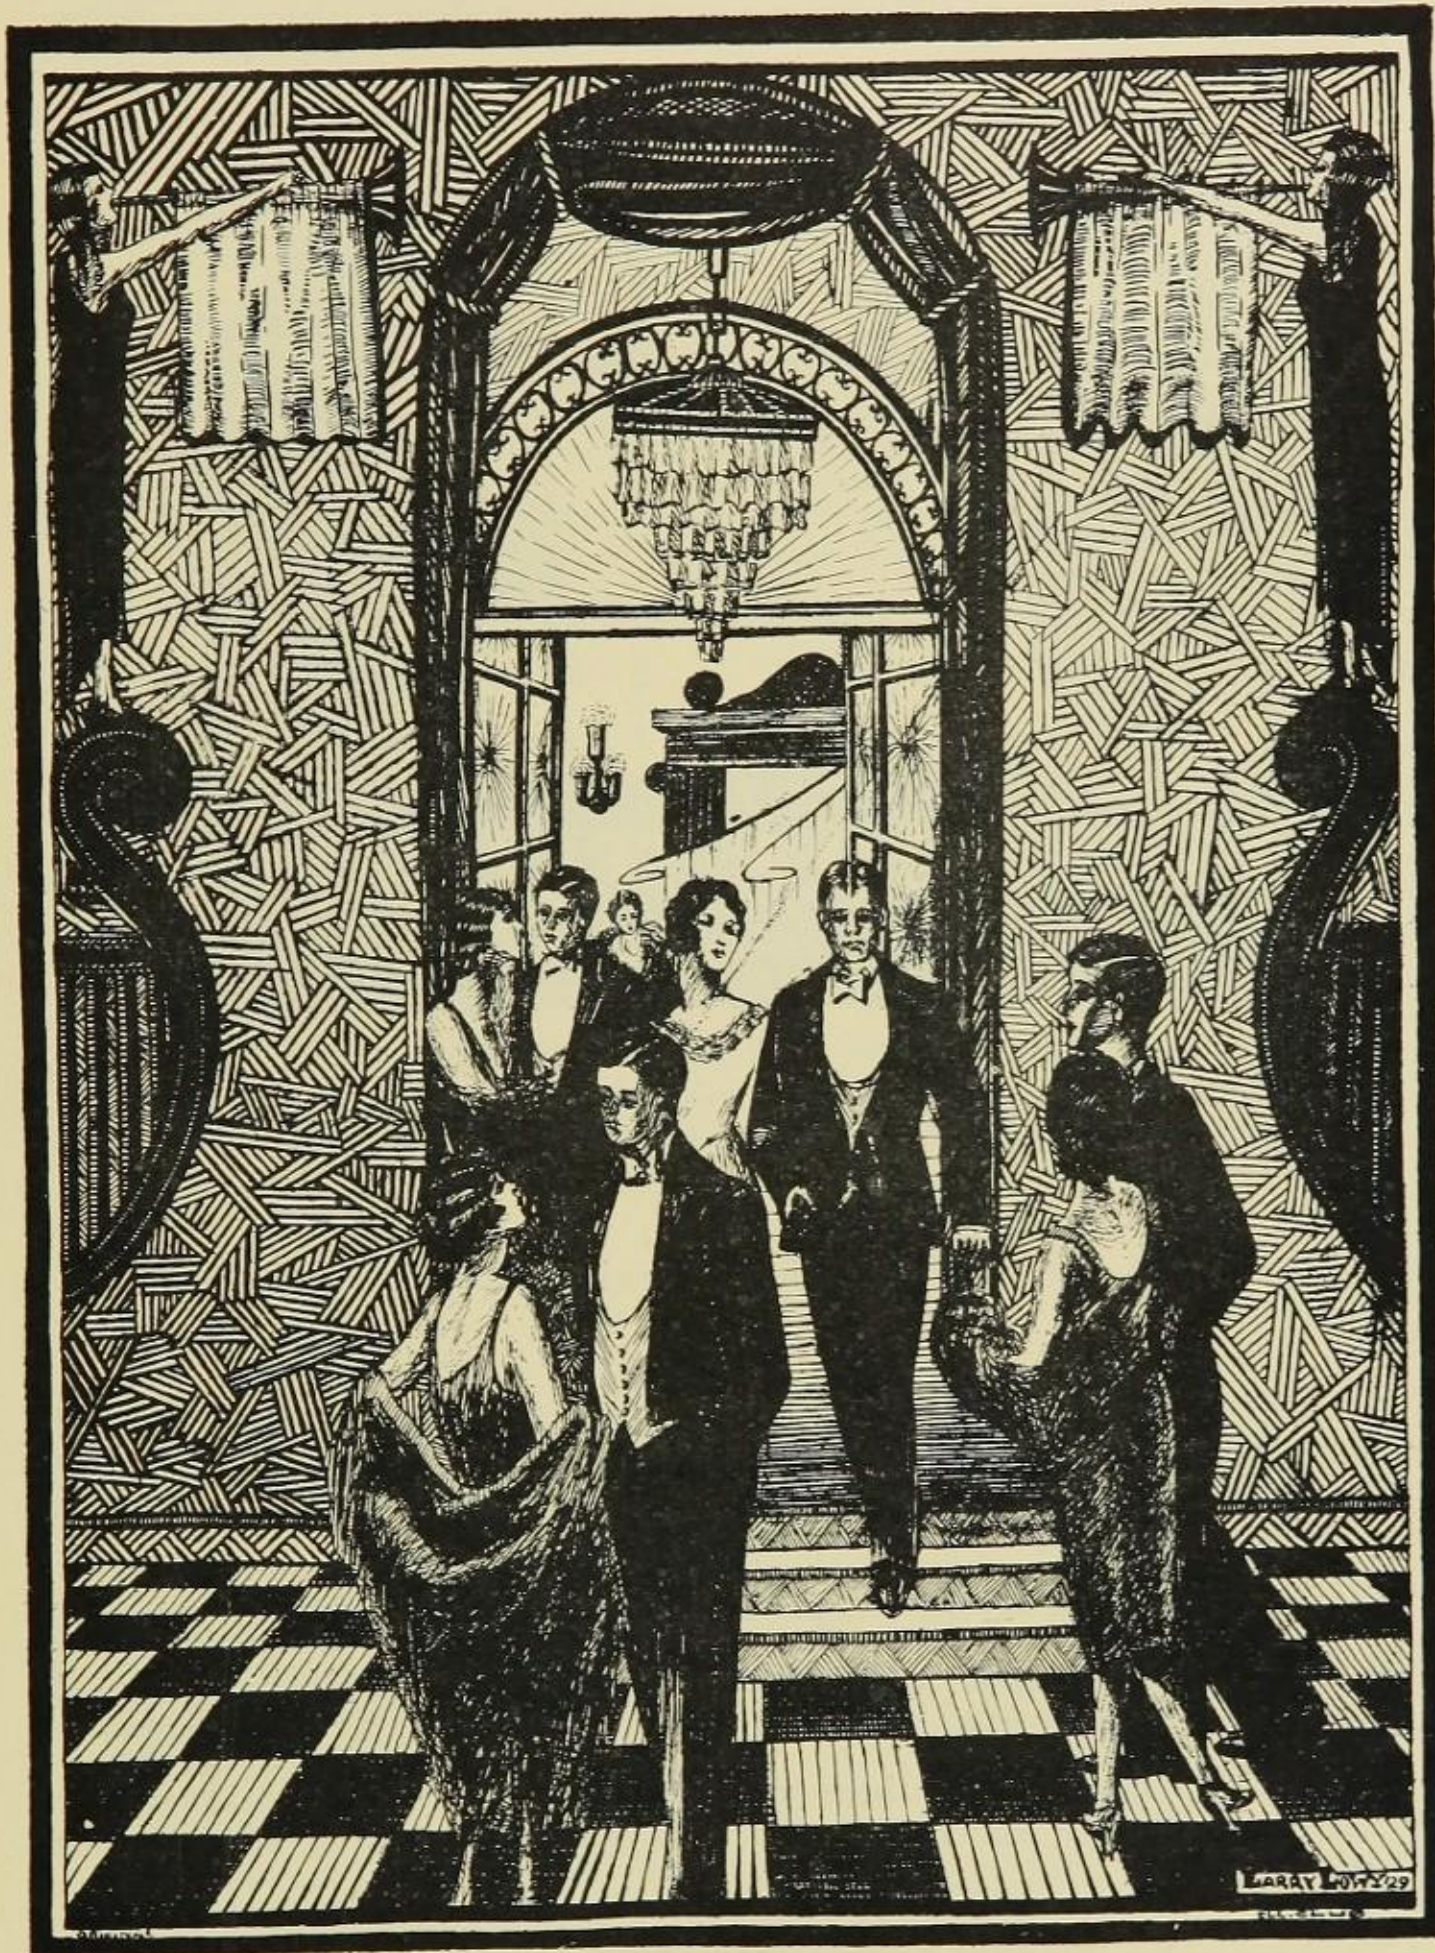

The night of the prom arrived. The hotel was crowded. Hundreds of boys and girls were coming and going. Pandemonium reigned. Another couple entered. Quite an attractive couple—the boy was of medium height, slender and graceful, with a charming clean-cut face. His companion was fair, and delightfully plump. They were soon joined by other couples.

"Why, Mil," one of the girls whispered to her, "where did you get that sheik? My dear, he is absolutely stunning." In a louder voice, "And where is Ti?" At this, Mil's companion turned around. Mil felt like a criminal and stood still for a moment. Then regaining her poise, she said, "May, meet my cousin, Tim." The orchestra started playing just then, and excusing himself to Mil's friend, he danced off with Mil. "Whew, that sure was a narrow escape, Mil." Their dance was soon interrupted by some fellow cutting-in. That was the last they saw of each other that evening—until, but wait! Mil now was surrounded by boys—Ti was with the girls. Not a soul suspected. All was perfect—And then—

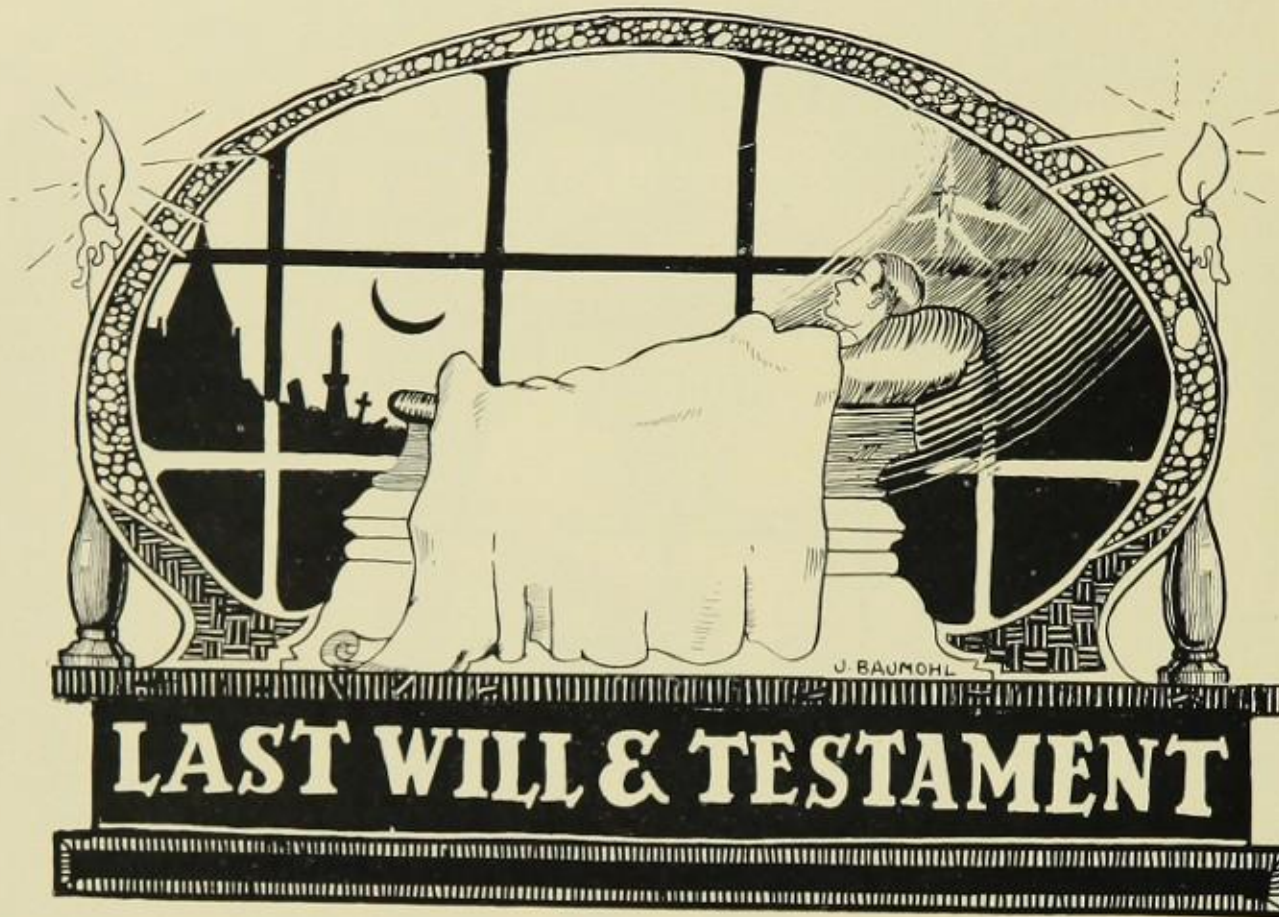

Fate is quite a tricky creature. It was he that made the class decide to serve ice cream that night. Ti decided to get some for herself and her companion. As Ti was about to take the plates in her hands, Fate, in the form of a boy, pushed her arm and—Ti's suit turned pink. "Come on Tim," cried one of the boys standing nearby, "come and wash up." "Sure," the other fellows chimed in, "go ahead, the ice cream will come off." Mil hurried over. She looked at Ti. What was Ti to do? Ti caught sight of her and flashed back the same question. The boys started off in the direction of the Boy's washroom. Good, Lord! What am I to do?, thought Ti. To go to the boys—why she couldn't think of it. To go to the girls—why that was worse. Was ever a girl in a worse predicament? What was she to do?

WRITE YOUR OWN ENDING FOR THIS STORY, DEAR READERS.

In the name of the James Monroe Senior Class, Farewell.

The Class of January 1929, presumably of sane mind, memory, and understanding, but mindful of the certainty of its decease, does hereby make, publish, and declare this to be its Last Will and testament in manner and form following:

FIRST: We hereby revoke any and all former wills made by it.

SECOND: We bequeath to the present Junior Class, the dignity bestowed upon us, and we instruct them to nurture it as tenderly as we have done.

THIRD: We bequeath to those unlucky souls to whom it belongs, the Arista portion of the Lunchroom, and may they rest in peace, as we shall do.

FOURTH: We bequeath a munificent number of sturdy pretzels, with as much salt as they desire, to aid those who partake in rehearsals of the Glee Clubs, and the Senior Dramatic Society, these to be awarded as seems fit.

Senior Class—Thirty-six

The Last Will and Testament Continued

FIFTH: We bequeath with the sincerest affection, our assembly seat, from which we could see all the exits, and none of the stage.

SEVENTH: We bequeath our G. O. Stub number 15, to be used by the person in greatest need.

EIGHTH: We bequeath all our blue slips from the Dean to the highest bidder, proceeds to be used for establishing a fund for the issuance of Late Passes.
